

Last

by Kalu Jo

Prologue

"You know, water is one of the greatest architects. You see, all of this was once a vast ocean, not so different from the beaches we'd visit every Sunday to watch the sunset. Over time, though, the water went away, and so did all the fish, coral... whatever sea life might've lived here. But as the water disappeared, it wasn't all loss. The rain, the river, the roaring tides. They all played a part in creating this.

THIS!

All that you see right in front of you... it was caused by little disasters! Little chips here and there, all caused by the flow of water. It only took millions of years, time you wouldn't even be able to comprehend. But look where we stand now. In front of something once wet, full, and teeming with life. Now dry, desolate, and delicate, but absolutely divine. Now, not all beautiful things last, so enjoy all of this while you can. Say, in the meantime, we give water a promotion for creating something so grand,

don'tcha think?"

life is only forever

op

edge	breeze
bleak	shore
forgotten silence	wallows
spring	wind
5 seconds left and i'm already bored	breeze
the greatest art of all inertia	trees
a monster's pride	tiny blossoms
the canopy caving in	ivy orbiting nonchalance	autumn
secret	papaya
never learned how to stop falling	watermelon stationary movement	spice
green	fruitgarden
humanitarium	the tree's thoughts
reequiem for the gentle lost	hilarious!
t.w.m.b.a.s. pt 1	dead tree grove moral mortality	garden
summer	lemons swept away away

release

returned recursion yellow journalism
society
i never do, only complain
winter
incompassionation
upset
t.w.m.b.a.s. pt 2
energy
consciousless posterity
t.w.m.b.a.s. pt 3
labels
handwavium
heaven, don't worry
savage
that talks that talk lost sentiment

wonder

skypainting
eyes
let's go down to the fields and not wake up i fulfill your dreams as they are mine winter wonderland
t.w.m.b.a.s. pt 4
planck length
the rockhounds
happy for me
feb 3, 2020
toxic chernobyl
what's in it for the sun?
the patina tower
symposia
time to think
last
bagel

a dull edge leaves lasting scars

Bleak

Nothing's in the scene
But a forgotten plateau
So desolate, too serene Nothing more to know

It's a loss of self for the loss of one another Forsaken everything for a long expedition Only to ask myself now, why even bother Hell, I'm no longer a man of conviction

Deep crevasses with nothing beneath Colors bleached and drained so dull
As a gentle breeze blows across the heath
The light glows dimmer within my skull

On a search for more dreams to live on Seems there's no more left to strive So when all that's dead is gone
Was anything alive?

Forgotten Silence

It was nothing like the voices of the crowds, the flashing of the constant pictures, or the gossip of the circles.

The rain splattered on to the pavement, creating a thunder of its own, leaving my ears restless once again.

A troublesome feeling conquered my thoughts, leaving my ears with a constant ringing into my pounding heart, the beats everclimbing.

The sounds were unrecognizable, escalating into a cling and clang of sorts bursting like fireworks.

All around me was chaos, the kind that gives you no time to feel any pain:
all the splashing, beating, buzzing, and crashing!

Distant gusts interrupted shifting sounds all around:
a loud screeching, a howling, a whistle!

Noises filled the vacuum, as I covered my ears with all my might praying that I'd soon be away from it all.

The day I finally came back home, leaving the tall lights, mirroring towers, and never forget, the neverending stream of people.

It was constant energy, my heart overcharged, but the moment I stepped foot into the woods, the heavy load dispersed all around.

I could feel the trees, dirt, and petrichor rising:
the dense smell of pine, cedar, the moist soil;
the mud and the Earth, they filled my senses.

The forest suddenly grew unruly, loud, boisterous, and chaotic just as everything I've ever known.

Animals: small furry jumpers to BIG ROARING MONSTERS
to the tiniest of insects to the swiftest of fairies

None of these creatures could understand me
But would constantly try and speak to me
So I asked:

Why do you wish to disturb my peace?

This is the forgotten silence that has always called from the distant woods.

And whenever I try to escape it, it follows my heartbeat.

Spring

Old buds bloom again
With tiny petals that'll fly
And scent the new air

5 seconds left and i'm already bored

it seemed fun at first to count down the years that've passed by like a breeze across a sea.
i'm sure if i've counted every second i prolly would've forgotten to die.
but time! it's never skipped a single beat;
with every tick i feel my breaths shorten.
i've not died, but i know death's pain too well, the pain of having not lived free through life but keep chained to this watch i've been given.
perhaps it's my fault i've always kept it, but life felt so urgent while i'm living that i never noticed all of these chains that've silently left on me all the weight i've forever been complaining about.

time: i've wasted it to the last minute too late to realize time has no purpose until you've started waiting for something that deep down you know may never arrive.
but you cling onto that faith, that damned faith and claim that life can't be so cruel to you.
now, it's been so long, too late to realize that what i've been waiting for was nothing and in moments, my wait will be over.
i'm no longer afraid that there's only five seconds left and i'm already bored

The greatest art of all

We are only so complex because we always try to give meaning to everything.

So the greatest art of all humankind is in finding meaning in the bleakest things.

And as we've not found meaning in everything yet, till then, we will keep on creating.

Cosmic Obsolescence

The sky was once the limit but now we know about space the emptiness of that void.

Filling voids with memories teaching futures of our past.
We think we'll be forever.

Inertia I

been a while since I started this trip a journey across the world I tell myself

I sail slowly without a breeze while others seem to ride skipping stones at the end, they tell me, is a lovely treat but halfway through, I find myself seasick so time stops a moment to let me catch my breath and that was enough just a moment of nothing for me to effortlessly sink down to the trenches never to be found again

Inertia II

I guess it's not the world I dreamed of But tomorrow's another day another haze
For me forget the reason why I live
And live the way I've always lived

A monster's pride

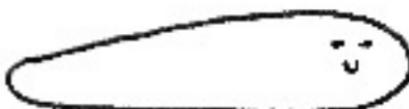

It stands there in the distance
With deviant eyes and a dirty smirk
You know it wants trouble
So you run before it catches you

Yet the monster's pride's too high It's never seen its own reflection
So it doesn't understand your screams And laughs about your running

It begins to move its slimy tail
And slithers across the pavement Catching up before you catch a breath
And before you scream, your eyes close

When brightness makes eyes sore We turn to monsters yet again Where in darkness we don't see The horrors of a monster's sight

You'd rather have most moments forgotten
And fill your minds with delicate comforts
So tonight, you have turned off the light To meet the monster, with all its pride

the canopy caving in we cut down forests not knowing what secrets may lie on the beds below

soon

we'll realize too late that we are wiping history for a moment of a miracle culprit no. 813,991,103,019,003

you know who you are you know what you've done.
it's about time you lost everything orbiting nonchalance

as the heaving starts the earth looks away and it's gotten so hot that all that's green has charred away to be blown to dust yet your lungs fight for one more breath and before you inhale your breathing stops and the earth's still spinning

round and round

round about the milky way

round and round

round about the stellar skies

Secret

we secretly love the terrors the broken breaths the tremors
we enjoy the shakes the terrible breaks we want to die
but we also want to thrive so we found a way to be in both because when life goes dull we are slapped awake by the dreadful dreams we call _____

Never Learned How To Stop Falling

I was once a bundle of joy crawling through the sheets awaiting the warm arms of my first two lovers but now I realize the arms have dropped me into an unforgiving world of falling ceilings through caving floors and groundless leaps into hell.

And as I fall
I listen to my own stutters muffled shouts and silent screams while I'm breathless for air.
But my lungs just won't tune.
They never forgot how to breathe, only learned how to stop.

Freefalling as I'm falling apart all I see is myself within the reflections I've cursed.
And as I'm surrounded by voices of cryptic familiarity, an uncomfortable set of eyes consume my soul.
Disgust and disappointment, permeating my veins, paralyzing my body into a horrible crippled state.
Still, my wandering soles and my ravenous soul awaits the ground.

I tell myself
It's all in my head
It's all in my head
It's all in my head...

But what can I do about it What can anyone do about it What is anyone doing about it?

Why is everything never enough?

Stationary Movement

I notice the floor of the train is wood
The cushion on my back a deep blue
And the way the edges of the windows Perfectly align with the velvet curtains

To the left, I witness tall pines, Blades extending, trunks elevating,
And to the right is an ocean view,
Low hanging bushes, coarse sandy patches

The lights dim in an instant, the floor rumbles Enter a tunnel, dark and narrow Muffled noises, confusing my ears Till a small growing light exposes
And green and blue noises appear Cultivated lands show, straight rivers running through Trees of the same kind, familiar branches, plump fruits

Telephone lines stretch afar Tall peaks and endless meadows Lying underneath soft clouds
I finally close my eyes
Until a beam of light disturbs my darkness

And as I open them
The trees have dried
The view is gray
The floor is hard
My body thrusts forward
The doors open
Where am I going again?

This train is strangely grounding.

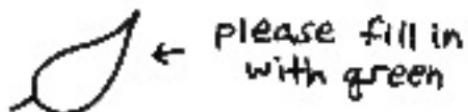

Green

I can only look back in time with pity.
My eye's become too far immune
To all the minutiae of beauty Within lush forests to a desert dune

I've realized my mind then was small
"The trees, they're green, they're tall Every spring they bud and change in fall"
To think I had seen it all...

It's sad to foresee a future for the world
No longer green but drained to gray Living a life with nothing new unfurled
In which nothing new will come of day

I was too old to realize; now I'll be forgotten
With all the imperfect, all that taints the scene
But before all the guilt we'll be ridden Remember, to never forget, the beauty of green

Humanitarium

“Mommy mommy! Where are we going?”

“I’m taking you to a special place out far.”

“Where? Where? Tell me tell me!”

“You’re going to visit the humanitarium.”

“What’s that?”

“It’s the place we put all the monsters.”

“But you said monsters weren’t real!”

“These are not that kind of monster.”

“What do you mean by that, mommy?”

“These monsters are real, they’re similar to us.”

“If they’re like us, are we also monsters?”

“No. We are not foul, dirty creatures. We are advanced. But we keep them there as a reminder.”

“What do they remind us?”

“They remind us what it means to be human.”

“What does it mean to be human?”

“It means to be what we were long ago, before all the changes, all of this progress.”

“Then why don’t we try to change and help them?”

"No matter how hard we would try they just would not stop persisting even when we gave them all the reasons to stop being human, they would never let it go. They are, truly, one of a kind. Unlike you and me. We aren't like that anymore."

“They sound so scary mommy! I wonder wh-.”

“Shh. There’s more to life than wonder, honey.”

requiem for the gentle lost there are those who are found and more of those who are never found and no-one dares to find those souls for they are long gone into the abyss.

so here is a requiem for the gentle lost:
those who were far too hurt to be reclaimed, too quiet to change their stubborn society, and too fearful of the consequences.

it's too bad that I can only find their souls, in broken pieces and fragments of despair, long after their souls have gone into the void,
with their influence in this world next to none.

but deep down I kept a morsel of hope that I can find these gentle lost souls, their hopes, dreams, greatest desires, and claim them back into the world.

but their hopes and dreams were never found.
as I now understand when something's lost you must either search for dear life or give up forever.

this window might be a screen pt 1

every morning I wake up and I look out the window I can see trees, the blue sky but I've never gone outside and at this point I wonder this window might be a screen contingent

nothing will happen until you have happened and you have not happened yet so I will wait

Moral Mortality I

to live with a clean record is like dying with every step tip-toe all you want, they will catch you slipping down the slippery, ragged slopes of what they call your sins.

you did not hear peace till you first screamed!
you did not see peace since you opened eyes!

so you really have no business being perfect in a universe bent towards chaos.

Moral Mortality II

see! even the oxygen we breathe is what feeds the flames of the forest so i wondered why i always even try when its easier to let the flames take over perhaps i'll always have it in myself to try and make the world better than it should be

Moral Mortality III (ft. The Devil)

The fate of all that's ordered is chaos and the fate of all that's living is death It must make you uneasy to think about.
So I suppose if it gives you any comfort, you can pretend that your deeds are good and tell yourself that your life is worth it.

Moral Mortality IV

i ask myself what i am contributing by living and the answer is nonetheless disappointing

i find myself hopelessly small in a big world where everyone says the same big things:

"i want to make the world a better place!"
"i want to become rich and/or be happy!"

when i consider my own words beside theirs i wonder: god, why can't i also be boring?

Moral Mortality V

if to live is to feel chaos maybe i'm perfectly alive

Summer

Leaves matured so green Fruits born grow much plumper, yet Children play no more

Swept Away Away

It's the flood, not the rain
That drives me so insane
The tsunami, not the quake
That really makes me ache
The impact, not the fall
The consequences of it all You know how it is The pain, not the push That you don't feel until after You're thrown into the water
And it pierces through your skin
To sink and ripple all around
And I'm frozen in place as the ripples Turn to great waves that approach To slowly drift me away away Away away to the edge Edge of the horizon Far far away

after the hit you take a breath of fresh air

Shore

I'm sitting here by the shore looking up at the skies gazing away

then close my eyes to hear the ocean

the thumping pumps and the twirling winds shrilling through my ears and the runaway hairs hiding behind my ears

it's the breeze that knew all along that I would come and now's the time to escape with it

Wallows

Wide green meadow, soft teal clouds in the sky
Eyes gleaming in the sunset, I let out a sigh

A lonely wind wallows in the background of the scene Laying low, carrying clouds, while dragging dust
It drifts gently through, keeping things serene
And all of my limbs slowly begin following the gust

The hairs beside my ears drift about the wavy breeze
As it enters into the tunnels, I pray that it quits Low chills through my spine, a momentary freeze
I stand still, throw my arms out, until it truly hits

Waterfalls once again, evoke within a confused cry
A victim to the force, carry my weight, and let me fly

Wind

Where does the wind come from?
From wide open seas?
Or somewhere in the cerulean skies
Or up from space, or the sun
Or the ground, the leaves that spawn
The turbulence within my heart

Winds

The winds, they don't dance in colors nor twirl to return they rise up from the waves and they don't mind a moment passing through you

Breeze

Why did the wind twirl around you But calm to a sullen breeze near me

Why did the air dance with music
The moment you appeared

But around me, it only hid Beyond the skies, up so high

What have I done to the skies
To deserve not even a breath of fresh air?

I supposed that the winds here are too timid
And undeserving of all I had to offer

So I ventured out, deep into the jungles Seeking the purest, strongest winds

But the last time I've caught a wind It was a hurricane

And it swept me away so far I've had to find myself all over again open arms in branches all around

Tiny Blossoms

A pattern of winding stars
A bouquet of legendary colors
A vibrance that outshines the sun
A peak in the morning sunshine

Each leaf and its dewdrop Sparkles beside the bright petals

The tiny blossoms have bloomed again
So come out and say hello

Ivy

*The ivy climbs up the walls that you built and by the window at night
it sees you weep*

so when the winds are howling and the thunder is roaring and your walls start breaking down it's what holds you together

Autumn

The sky seems deeper Overripe berries birds pluck Clouds they come and go

Papaya

The pawpaw leaves fall down low Oh, carica carica Bear your fruit once more

Watermelon

i sit on the wondumak on the most humid day sweat dripping down my spine hot wind cooling my tanned skin biting into the last few bits of the sweet, crisp red fruit

i lay back down on the tarp as i'm carried away by the sweet fields dreaming of another youth

Spice

at a certain point peppers aren't spicy anymore

proof

keep proving how strong you are.
it's funny to watch

Fruitgarden

i dropped seeds to come back in a decade but when the time had come, i forgot:

once the fruitgarden's sprung life takes you on a journey within with too many things to try and too many things to see till nothing satiates anymore.

so i decided to lay down on the bench to take a gentle nap:

in my dreams i am in the garden, picking fresh jaboticabas off the trunk biting crisp sapotes, oozing sticky latex cutting mangoes, dripping with juice as i try my best to savour every last drop

i woke up under a crumbling city light, not knowing where i'm supposed to be:

*a century's past and all that's left is bark.
there's nothing left to try and every bite of dust leaves me hungrier and i regret not tending to my fruitgarden when i had the chance but when did i ever have the time?*

the tree's thoughts

't'one time, thick trees, thriving, tranquil tiny tassles torn 'tween the thicket

'til then, the timberland, tamed to tiny towns till this time, trees trampled, tainted trails terrors the tender thoughts 'ttempt to tamper take tolls to the tyrant's torment!

Hilarious!

Laughing hard at a fallen leaf dead tree grove

i had a calling.

it was to a place far away and i could quite feel the direction of the wind guiding me into the woods

i walked till daybreak.

i stood on a pile of dust and the trees had no leaves to rustle in the air so the wind was silent

i sorta liked it.

time

i've lived too long to live in a moment

Garden

never forget the peace you felt in the garden even when buildings block the view at least you can look down at curled leaves and wonder what you did to deserve such a garden

Lemons

Since when was it cool
To not give a fuck
'bout the world's problems
Since when was it ok
To not do a thing
'cause when life gives you lemons
You throw them away

残念ですね

Returned Recursion

We forget we're taught How we empathize
What we can care about (Who we can show our love)

We are made psychopaths
In this world of absoluteness
That we think twice about our pockets
But not even once about each other

And in the end we only wonder Why we're not given any love When we've not given any at all (And to think that love's a finite resource)

Are we just so used to the idea that What we've given must be returned And we must fight and guard everything?
(That every resource is finite)

I wish we could find in each other
What we find in oil like coal like silver like gold For we figured that we won't give away Before we know that we will be given back

Yellow Journalism

How loud can the pages read Before I go completely deaf How bleak can the pages get Before I lose all faith in life

How long can these pages get Before new stories are no more Till there's no more ink to spare (To think a drop can change a mind)

We hide away in pages of pink Absorb all the purple tabloids While the pages of the past turn yellow Turned to waste to wrap some gifts

Some pages turn red, drenched in blood
A color so strong they'd rather close their eyes
And return to the shades of comfort
Of craze, of sensation, of a fool's fashion

But who can blame those who cannot bear
The countless stories of life left unshared As once they're shared the world moves on And till change the stories will repeat on and on and

Society

"How far can we blame society
Before we blame ourselves
For raising a generation
So far from our good
That a pyramid
Can topple Down?"

I never do, only complain

Sometimes I forget that part of who I am is where I am and who I am around but I never stand tall on my feet as I fear to be too loud and that I may call the voices of those who are louder and who may shut me down with their golden charisma and their soft pleated sheets and their perfect scripts I've forgotten what I was to have fought for if I knew that I would be safe to speak my mind but I guess I'd rather run away into my head that doesn't even really feel safe so I escape through my complaints and when they fight back I can only cover my ears because I never learned to fight back and they echo far beyond all the trees and mountains as they come toppling down and erupt I forget that those with voices are the least responsible and those without have no idea and its hits

God, my requiem will be glorious.

Winter

mountains tipped with ice forming crystals all around best to stay inside

~~why's the winter warm?~~ ~~what happened to the cool breeze?~~ ~~where are the seasons?~~

Incompassionation

Since when have schools forgotten to teach compassion

To the students of a world so broken

Who've been taught what's wrong

And live only to find the wrong in others

To read books and absorb big words

That justify in life what seems so cruel

But forget the problem that started it all.

Have we forgotten that we all start from a blank slate?

And that some of us have been scribbled on?

At a certain point the textbooks lose their meaning

And we can only learn from each other

Through life and through experience

Yet, in a world full of horrors of our own cruelty

We are taught not to question

A world so bizarre

That we become monsters to our own.

Upset

I'm upset that too much been had done undone so I don't know if any change is here to last

this window might be a screen pt 2

I have decided to finally escape this little confinement I dwell in so I get ready, brush my hair and I set out for the door but there is no handle I'm not sure how to get out

Energy

I complain these people exude too much energy that I just can't feel for what they feel they speak so loud they're mouths keep moving

I just can't bear these people who seem to be able to find so much joy in making noise and making friends how happy they look that energy that I just cannot match it's always been envy

Consciousless

You don't know what you haven't seen you think "the world's better off the same" you would say the world's all good and change can't work but you know your mind has never been free since the last time you've not drunk a bottle of shine really? another fucking bottle?

posterity

oh how I fear that my posterity will never live the way ! have

this window might be a screen pt 3

instead, I decide to jump out the window I take three deep breaths, clench my fists start off quickly, gaining speed I run toward the window
I take the leap, hurling through the air
The window shatters, I jump through

Labels

The world's an archive Filing cabinets overflowing at the top
But they always want to add more.

So they amputate each of my limbs Tack a label
And put them into boxes

Because there's never enough of me
To fit into all the boxes
And I can only hold so many labels

Before I become nothing fuck it i'm nobody

Handwavium

why do we doubt ourselves when we've proved for countless years that we are gods of our own control yet we still doubt those thinker's thoughts would ever work

heaven, don't worry

i wondered what it was like to be up there.

i always thought of it pointlessly perfect, something of a vain, superficial dream that you convince yourself you always wanted.

i wondered how i'd even get the holy ticket and considered all the choices i'd have to make but i realized there's no point in kissing ass since i was already comfortable in my own hell with its tiny pleasures and great discomforts or so i'd try and lie to myself to feel better about this horrible place i always wake up in.

i look ahead, standing in my cigarette break, waiting for my thoughts to die with the smoke.

the broken sanctum

my paranoia is all too real it's broken in

Savage

i love that word let us be savages oh you don't want to?

savagé. there.

i figured if the word savage had a pretty little accent mark at the end you would be less afraid of being it

That talks that talk

We've argued for so long now
I no longer think we're talking About the same damn thing

We live our life to prove such points
And forget that we've not anything To prove more than our own will

Yet we still talk that talk Mindless yappers and whispers Snap snap snap we scream

I roll my eyes
And you show your teeth

I'm not taking your thoughts to my deathbed.

demise

does anyone remember learning about death?
that things never come back
UNLESS YOU WANT THEM TO HAUNT YOU FOREVER

Lost Sentiment

When will we remember
That compassion is free
No matter at what cost

When will we remember
That forgiveness will win
Regardless of the fight

When will we realize That we cant move on Without being human

i often wonder

Skypainting

The sky our canvas
An empty board to paint start anew
And paint the sky a lighter blue

But we seem to've lost our skill

As we throw dirty brushes
Into water never changed
And let the colors mix

And when we finally start to color

The oil leeches out all over the place
The paint's placed in patchy plots Scribbled lines of mess' mistakes

I guess
We're so good at thinking pretty pictures
But bad at making them real

Eyes

If we had closed our eyes Did any of it really happen?

If we had closed our minds Was any of it real?

Whether we close our eyes
Or block up our mind

The world's still spinning
And when we open them back up

We won't be in control anymore

Let's Go Down To The Fields And Not Wake Up

you've sat there long enough to know you're bored and i know a place in the fields you'd love all trees and grass and skies and dirt and me

we can cuddle on the grassbed all night breathe the pollen, let the hay knock us out feel the rumbles of the earth free themselves there's no regrets and nothing more to see and you have nothing else to give up, so,

let's go down to the fields and not wake up

I fulfill your dreams as they are mine when we were laying down by the fields we talked together about our dreams you told me all of yours and I told you all of mine years have past since and I've never met you but I still remember that dream you told me and I've kept onto it right here in my head ever since and I can't say I'm not obsessed because I am, not with you, but your dream so that if you saw who I was today you would be quite disappointed because that day, you gave me all the reasons to not follow in your footsteps but I did anyways and I can't blame anyone but myself it was your prophecy I wrote for myself and I've fulfilled every part of it and I'm out here craving more but nobody has dreams anymore so tonight, I'll go back to sleep to take you in my dreams

Winter Wonderland

They were not playing
"Children shout and ring the bells"
It was a warning

gold is just yellow metal

999.9 is nothing but 0.1 short gold is really just yellow metal

this window might be a screen pt 4

I fall down on the other side face scratched up, legs twisted I open my eyes to look around but there's nothing, just static all around the window had been a screen and I've broken through it

planck length

in physics, there is something known as the planck length, the point where things get so small that once below, the laws of physics makes sense no more and to me it seems that we must be living in a world smaller than the planck length because last I checked, nothing makes sense

the rockhounds

We think we're Earth
The greatest artist, founder of birth
But all that's bullshit.

So I go down to the river
By which I search for rocks
And hope one day I'll find the one

Opal

glistens in the sun as it begs for water

Citrine

pale smoked honey we've forgotten its true color

Talc

crumbles in my hand as I look for more

Happy For Me

It's a gray day outside
The wonderful rain is feeding the garden
And I'm happy for me
For I can sing the songs I've written Read the poems I made For I can sleep in peace
Knowing that I've lived a day well spent

Ajumma

There's so much power in living upapologetically

feb 3, 2020

frightening me tiny scars chipping the stones and the hammer breaking apart all the burdens of my past they say that death is humbling

no. my death was glorious

Toxic

We live in a beautiful world

Filled with toxic people

Tainting the lush green forests

With rotten brown

And the pristine skies

With muffled yellows

And the crystal waters

With crimson red

And the antidote

We searched so far and long

Was right beside us

In the space between us

Chernobyl

I've booked a vacation
To this beautiful paradise

I heard when you visit
You will change forever

So let's go
And never come back

What's in it for the sun?

for the light that birthed us life the rays that sometimes burn but shield us from the ice

what's in it for the sun
for all of this energy we no longer praise

what's in it for the sun
what's in it for the sun
what's in it for the sun

can someone please tell me

what's in it for the sun?

The Patina Tower

I've seen many pretty towers
All that's brick and painted gold That's perfect squares and rosy arches

The well-cut trees and joyous fountains
To yellow brick roads and strawberry gardens
And wonderful rooms of rare antiques

But I've never seen a tower as grand
As the patina tower, what a wonderful name
The tower unnamed before time had spoken

For late at night when I dream of a home I go back to the tower, the patina tower

"I will never forget the wonderful trees the overgrown roads, the toppled hills, the walls, covered in thick growth of ivy and the breeze that flies down from the sky"

The patina tower:
That stands upright
In the hearts of those Who seek good nights

Symposia

we talk about our feelings what we hate, all our woes that we wish to rid from life and also those we love so dearly but I find the talk to be the least interesting part though I love the company of your conversation I prefer to feel peace in each other's silence while my mind plays instruments of the air that music fills the quiet air with a melody and voice that twirls like spinning tops and puts me into an endless trance

Time To Think

We no longer sow the soil or bend our backs by the river no more fights with monsters except those inside our minds our minds seem so damn bored we once lived to fight and fly now we can't stand a moment alone because we fear where it can take us thoughts we've never had before new thoughts no human of the past could bear to even think would last but it seems time's only gotten longer headless baseless foes and woes we find within our little minds we have much time to fret too much time to bask in thoughts so perhaps we've got to finally try to get used to all the places our mind can take us falling as we try to get a hold of ourselves

Last

This may be our last Or perhaps our kind will last Learning from the past

Bagel

If my dog could write a poem
She would change the world

Epilogue

"It's been a difficult past to relive.

My spirit has endured countless experiences and too many lives to count. Just as they've warned me, once your soul's gone through too many cycles, the memories all blur into one.

But moments are different from memories. And now I come to realize that my memories, for the most part, have been largely false. For every moment I relived just now, I feel almost as if all of them were in vain. But at this point in life, I no longer feel anything in regret.

Time. Matter. The law of everything. I come to know them far too well. I met everyone, been everywhere, and seen everything. All the faces, landscapes, and baggage. They pile up a heavy mess on my mind, body, and responsibilities. Only so late I have realized how easy it is to let go. And after all this time, I finally know that it's really all in the fleeting moments.

Now, I suppose, it's time to let you go too."

